

I just wanted to say that I would be excited to have the power lines carry broadband. Like many others, I'm concerned about interference with amateur and other frequencies used for communication. My idea is to have a requirement to have filters installed on the power lines for them to supply the service. The power lines should still be considered an "incidental radiator" and be treated as such.